1. The first set of images is specified by the highlighted region being the text that appears on the frames. In each of the following the main focus of the frame is the text. So all of these make sense.
2. The second set of images is specified by highlighting the window frame. Each image shows the window even though some images have items blocking or they are coming from different point of view.
3. The third set of images is specified by highlighting a vase of flowers. I found this to be the most interesting because in each of the related frames it actually caught different vases of flowers in the frame. I hope this is not by coincidence and just the code working correctly.
4. The fourth set of images is specified by highlighting a couch cushion. This is nothing special or tricky but I just wanted to see if it would capture the frames that were all alike and had Joey moved around a bit.
5. The fifth set of images is specified by highlighting Phoebe in a green blouse. This was interesting because of how it actually got the color specific and only showed images that had Phoebe wearing this blouse.
6. NOTE: A few weird things I noticed is patterns didn't come very specific and the related images were often not making much sense. The faces of people did not really specify for each person more like if you had eyes you were related.
